Speech Burgemeester

Distinguished guests, ladies and gentlemen,

Let me bid you a warm. It is a great pleasure to see you all.

Welcome to my official residence. This house was built in the Dutch Golden Age – in the 17th century - for Paulus Godin, a prominent Amsterdam merchant. It changed ownership several times until ABN AMRO Bank's predecessor donated it in 1927 to the City of Amsterdam to serve as the Mayor's official residence.

Did you know that, last year, PWC conducted research to compare 31 world cities? I am proud to tell you that Amsterdam ranked fourth amongst the most competitive cities in the world. Only London, New York and Singapore ranked ahead of Amsterdam. This was mainly thanks to our excellent technology infrastructure, our highly educated workforce, our proximity to Schiphol airport, good healthcare, pleasant living conditions and low crime.

Due to this excellent business climate, Amsterdam forms a hub for international head offices and is very successful in attracting headquarter-related activities. Currently, there are about 2,700 international companies based in the region. A large and highly-developed cluster of financial and business services has developed around these head offices, with Dutch and foreign banks playing a vital role. The financial and business services cluster represents about 20% of our economy and employs 15% of our workforce. Alongside banks, trading firms and insurance companies, the region has many international law and accountancy firms. Amsterdam is home to the global headquarters of accounting firm, KPMG, and a host of other professional service firms covering legal affairs, management, pensions and tax consultancy, all of which serve to ensure businesses in the area are served efficiently.

The city government of Amsterdam is proud to have such excellent representation in this sector here and works hard to keep the investment climate optimal. We speak to the national government and the regulators, including the Dutch Central Bank, to ensure that together we keep the Netherlands an open and attractive environment for international banks to operate from.

Distinguished guests, ladies and gentlemen, thank you for coming. Do enjoy your evening.
